

i hate my vanity,
stretched across my
face. it clings to me
clings to my breath, my blinking eyes run across its surface. the mirror reflecting the very vain narcissus peering in.
will it allow me to see inside, or will
it blink right
back?
into
my
dirty
face.